Glenn D. Seeley vs. JPMorgan Chase Holdings, LLC

Count I: Wrongful Failure to Timely Process Stock Sale Order

On August 31, 2017, JPMorgan Chase Holdings, LLC ("JPM") failed to execute a sale order of 266 shares of JPM stock from my JPM managed investment account at the price of $91.85 per share. The stated reason for the refusal was that, as an employee of JPM, I was required to obtain pre-clearance to trade JPM stock. At the time of the sale order, I had been retired from JPM for two full months; NO pre-clearance was required, as I was no longer an employee. After much wrangling, the sale order was finally processed on September 5, 2017, but at the then current price of $89.25, representing a loss of $2.60 per share. Demands to JPM to honor the original sale order price of $91.85 have been refused. The refusal of JPM to pay the stock price difference represents an unlawful breach of contract, custodial negligence, custodial misconduct and breach of fiduciary duty.

My damage under Count I is $691.60.

Count II: Unlawful Conversion of Health Spending Account Funds.

As a JPM employee, as of June 30, 2017, I had paid $1200 into an employee health spending account ("HSA") managed and controlled by JPM. JPM has wrongfully denied my claim to be reimbursed from that HSA for medical expenses incurred by me, claiming that when I retired on June 30, 2017 I was no longer eligible to be reimbursed from my HSA which had been funded with money that I had paid. The refusal by JPM to pay the reimbursement request from my HSA represents an unlawful conversion of funds, breach of contract, failure to account and fraud.

My damage under Count II is $1200.
